"There were some news reports in the last year that some importers were using this route to import chemic-als at a lower rate and diver-ing them to pharmaceutical companies and distilleries. The purpose of the entry was to support R&D. However, considering the diversion to non-R&D activities, the government has plugged the loophole by increasing customs duty, "Shashi Mathews, Partner, IndusLaw, said. While no exemption is provided, legitimate importers should petition or make a representation to Government to consider introducing an end-use notification so that R&D activities are not impacted, he added.

However, pharma veter-ans say this should be seen as a quality-oriented move rather than to raise govern-ment revenue. WW Life Sci-ences Managing Director Arun Kedia told businessifine that it has long been an in-dustry concern, and at a time when the focus is on quality medicines, it is important for hearth of the protect of high callity. "And while there are com-panies that bring in quality chemicals, there are also those that import and re-peackage lab chemicals, and if that is of low quality, it af-fects the product being made here," explains Kedia. Krishan Arora, Partner, Grant Thornton Bharat, says the move could have far-reaching consequences. "Pharmaceutical companies and research labs might face soaring costs for critical im-ported chemicals, poten-tially driving up research ex-penses and end product prices," he added.

'US-focused drugmakers need dynamic, even daily, forecasting'

A steep hike in customs duty on lab chemicals from 10 per cent to 150 per cent in the Budget has surprised re-searchers. The community has sought clarification and called for exemptions to en-sure research continuity. Laboratory chemicals (Harmonised System Code 9802) include fine chemicals and pure compounds used by Drugmakers focused on selling medicines in the US are increasingly caught between price erosion and escalation, says Vector Consulting Group (VCG), calling for a dynamic, even daily, system of forecasting.

Mixed signals from the US are confusing drugmakers, and they oscillate between "cost-cutting and growth strategies," says Shejal Jose Kuruvilla, VCG Head of Knowledge and Research. An accurate forecast, a month ahead, is an oxymoron, Kuruvilla tells businesstine. The market requirement may completely change in a month and companies are left with inventories to be destroyed, she adds. Companies need flexibility and agility in their operations to be able to change tack, depending on the daily market requirement, if need be, she points out. Flexibility does not involve terminating jobs, but requires a mindset change, says Kuruvilla, giving an insight into the 18-year-old home-grown consulting group's Pharma Vision report. Companies have archaic manufacturing practices that builds inflexibility into the system, she adds.

SUPPLY CHAINS
"There is hidden capacity in plants, they just don't see it," says Kuruvilla, adding that companies can become first responders to a situation. It involves making "quality cleared raw maternal" available to the company, as a product in a super-market, that can be picked up when required. Supply chains are global and there are other wariables, so getting global and there are other variables, so getting everything in place together at the same time, could bring in delays, she adds. Similarly, with "short-burst planning cycles with a focus on daily execution, companies can achieve a 30-50 per cent reduction in R&D lead times and a 50 per cent increase in project output," the report points out.
